

Please don't erode the powers of New Jersey's Do Not Call law, or any other state's Do Not Call law. Along with the federal law, the New Jersey law has made a huge difference in cutting down the number of unsolicited telemarketing calls to my home. In addition, I've found that the callers who do get through get off the phone fast after I inform them that I'm registered on both the federal and state Do Not Call lists. They don't like it, I know. But guess what? I don't like being harassed by salespeople on the phone. The federal Do Not Call law was a landmark achievement, and it made a lot of Americans realize that the government really does care about their peace of mind and not just about the ways of capitalism. We've embraced the state laws, too, for the same reason. Please leave the state laws alone, and let them work to their full potential. Thank you for considering our comments.
